"We need a world where sustainable human well-being is the primary goal, not the insane delusion of infinite growth. In Enough Is Enough, Rob Dietz and Dan O'Neill tell us how to get there. It is the most readable description of the fundamental problems with the "growth at all costs" economic paradigm and how focusing on "enough" material consumption can make room for all the other things that contribute to human well-being.

He says in Fratelli Tutti, "Digital connectivity is not enough to build bridges. It is not capable of uniting humanity" (43). Francis seems to suggest that the use of virtual community-building efforts do nothing to assuage the pervasive concern that the pandemic and its aftermath will accelerate our fragmentation, including—but certainly not limited to—the death of the parish .

I am 17 years old and building my first own PC after having several second-hand PCs. I saved money for a really long time, so I could build a very strong PC which I could use for my study and for gaming for the upcoming years. Today I finally got all my parts in, except the GPU (Gigabyte Vision OC RTX 3080, should be here in 1 or 2 weeks).
